What I Would Do to Make My Community a Better Place

Monroe is an amazing town and I love it, but there's always room for improvement! Maybe we could start collecting toys for local children's hospitals. Or we could start distributing mini libraries! Here are two things I would do to make my community a better place.

One thing I would do to make Monroe a better place is to start a day where our town could collect toys for a children's hospital in our community. We could set up snacks, a raffle, and a lot of activities. Like a festival, participants could collect tickets from games and cash them in for smaller prizes. People could donate toys, games, and books to the children's hospital as an entry ticket. This can raise awareness about kids who need our help. I think having this day would be a fun way to help our local children's hospital.

Another thing I would do to make Monroe a better place is to start distributing "mini libraries" in neighborhoods around Monroe. I know not every child likes reading, and I think that encouraging kids to start reading books is important, no matter what age. To make a "mini library" you really just need a large box, some books, and an imagination. You can donate a few books to start your collection, and encourage other people to do the same. I love reading books and this is a way to share that love with others. Overall, I think a "mini library" is a creative and fun way to get kids to read books without taking them too far.

Monroe is a wonderful place, and I think that collecting toys for a local children's hospital and distributing mini libraries is what I would do to contribute to my town. Let's make Monroe the best place to live!
